Jul 17, 2006 I just purchased Borland developer studio, when trying to install it, I am getting an error of "Setup could not determine the correct installation directory and the installation is aborted" What do I need to do to get it installed? A: You have a problem with the Installer. I have seen this message on other versions in the past. Try to choose your install drive C:\ instead of the default drive C:\Documents and settings\Administrator\eclipse. A: Go to [Get Info] of the "C:\Documents and Settings\Administrator\eclipse.exe" and find the installation path: Click on [Location Info] It is the default directory; you can change it if you want to Among various techniques proposed as a technique for making high-resolution-images, there is a technique of using, for example, an optical system whose numerical aperture (NA) is sufficiently large. In a case where an optical system is constituted by three optical elements, the resolution is determined by an expression $1/NA^2$ or $2NA$. The larger the numerical aperture NA of the optical system, the higher the resolving power. However, use of an optical system having a numerical aperture NA larger than a predetermined value entails increasing the number of total lenses of the optical system, and thus, often makes the optical system large in size. In consideration of such circumstances, there has been proposed a technique in which an optical element is provided with a phase shift member having an optical action of a refractive optical element (see U.S. Pat. No. 6,801,811). According to the technique disclosed in U.S. Pat. No. 6,801,
