So, what do you need to consider when you invest in a digital camera and start using it? Can you see all the features? First of all, you need to be aware that you don't have to buy a superhigh-definition camera, because one that has the ability to see into the detail of objects and skin is as good as any. The difference lies in the quality of the display when you look at and shoot photos. A digital photo that's displayed on your computer's LCD monitor is much larger than one displayed on a printed photo paper, which is better for viewing detail and color, but not as good for viewing the overall image. Many digital cameras include a button that enables you to magnify an image so that you can view the fine details. Figure 10-3 demonstrates how you can use this button to magnify the image without making it bigger. This is very useful if you can't see the entire image. Figure 10-3: Press the magnification button and zoom out to increase the size of your image. Is it a lens? The size and shape of the lens play a significant role in determining the quality of your photos, so it's important that you have a wide range of lenses available to you. As a general rule, you need lenses that are designed to photograph from a wide-angle view to get a bird's eye view of your subject. Wide-angle lenses enable you to capture objects in and around the edges of the frame, which increases the chance of cropping unwanted elements from the frame. Figure 10-4 showcases some commonly used lenses in the digital camera market. These days, you often find digital camera manufacturers offering a zoom lens with different focal lengths on the same camera body, meaning that you can get the wide-angle view that makes it easier to frame your photos at the same time as increasing the zoom of your lens to get a closer up view. Figure 10-4: Sharpness decreases as the focal length gets longer. Lenses that are designed for consumer use are generally unsuitable for professional use. You may find that some manufacturers offer a wide-angle lens and a standard zoom lens, but that only covers part of the range. In this case,

This is often used when you need to isolate a particular part of an image from the rest. The Spot Healing Brush is used to correct small, localized problems. This is a really good tool if you just need a small part of an image to be fixed. Brushes let you add effects to your work. A great example of this would be painting with watercolor. More on this story CAIRO (AP) — Egyptian security forces have forcibly removed Islamist protesters from near Cairo University in the early hours of Saturday morning, state-run media reported. At least 10 armed men in military uniforms and carrying clubs smashed windows, moved down side streets and carried out raids on the buildings of the Islamic groups involved in the sit-in, state TV and the Ahram and Asefah newspapers said. The attacks happened within a few hours of the military police spokesman announcing the army had removed the protesters from the university campus. The clashes began when hundreds of Islamist hardliners moved into the university square and began to occupy a podium in front of the university library. Some of the protesters smashed windows and set fire to garbage bins. The protesters, members of the Muslim Brotherhood's political arm, the Freedom and Justice Party, backed by hard-line Salafis, had previously been occupying one of the buildings on the university grounds. They are demanding the release of their colleagues detained during the crackdown on a massive demonstration near the presidential palace in which as many as 10,000 people were arrested. On Wednesday, Egypt's Interior Ministry banned the Muslim Brotherhood, considered a terrorist organization by the state, as well as its political arm and the youth wing from holding any sort of demonstration or gathering anywhere in the country. The measures were taken after street clashes between Muslim Brotherhood supporters and security forces following the presidential election. The Brotherhood will not be able to challenge the decision in any court, the lawyer told the official MENA news agency. A statement issued by the local branch of the Supreme Constitutional Court - the highest judicial body in Egypt - said it "will not authorize the institution of any lawsuit against the measures that ban the Brotherhood." The statement said the court hoped such a ban would not affect its constitutional authority to review and rule on any measure passed by the parliament or the Cabinet. It said the court could suspend the measures for a specific time, and it added that it is reviewing the issue, but cannot interfere in the matter until it decides. The government has decided to bar the Islamist group from any activity, including marches, gatherings, demonstrations and rallies, it says, according to a statement released by the government Friday night. Under the law, the interior ministry can impose a three-year ban on any group, including the Muslim Brotherhood. A government order issued Friday night also suspended the
